NRSF SUPPORTS NATIONAL YOUTH TRAFFIC SAFETY MONTH

May 2009 -- The National Road Safety Foundation, Inc. (NRSF) participated in the National Youth Traffic Safety Month, which runs through the entire month of May.

NOYS (National Organizations for Youth Safety), hosted their first “NOYS on the Hill Day,” where student members of NOYS and associate members, (NRSF is an active member) all met with lawmakers and their aids in Washington, DC. Participants rallied on the Hill to raise the awareness of traffic safety as a major issue for young people.

Among the several topics that were discussed, the need for stronger and more uniform graduated driver licensing (GDL) laws in every state was key. NRSF is an avid advocate of driver education, as well as, effective GDL laws.

NRSF co-hosted a luncheon on Capitol Hill, which was opened to law makers and the public. NOYS, along with several member organizations, displayed and distributed free traffic safety materials to all.

NOYS’s Executive Director Sandy Spavone, said “she plans to make Hill Day an annual event during Youth Traffic Safety Month.” NRSF was represented by Operations Manager, Michelle Anderson and Public Relations Director, David Reich.
